This was the Peugeot 404 estate after I took it apart, before a serious amount of welding

On a visit to Mahon Falls

Ciaran Conneely and I visited Mahon Falls , since then, because the car flexed so much, the back door won't close properly..... Sharp eyed aficionados may spot the new livery, done because otherwise "le Noir" just looked too much like a hearse.

It looks great on the photo, but an hour later it started to rain and I spent a night with a storm from the atlantic banging against the side of the car. The guttural calls of sheep, keeping me awake all night. An ocean of rain seeped into my sleeping bag, inside the car. Cold, wet and tired , but this eejit still grinned.

404 at Mahon Falls

Mahon Falls as a glacial valley has all the ruggedness emblematic of wild Ireland. Something powerful swept over the land. The sheep though, were unimpressed with the suitably liveried "voiture classique".

Peugeot 404 looking out at Mahon Falls (Sept 2022)

The machine had no trouble getting up, it was the down, that had its downside.....

404 somewhere past the "slighted" Dunhill Castle

The brake booster failed and I drove for a thousand miles before getting it fixed. My brother and I circumvented the offending part and I spent many incredibly happy times pressing the brake pedal with all my might. The narrow, twisting, undulating roads are the most fun to drive, but that's peppered with moments of terror.

Not what it's supposed to look like

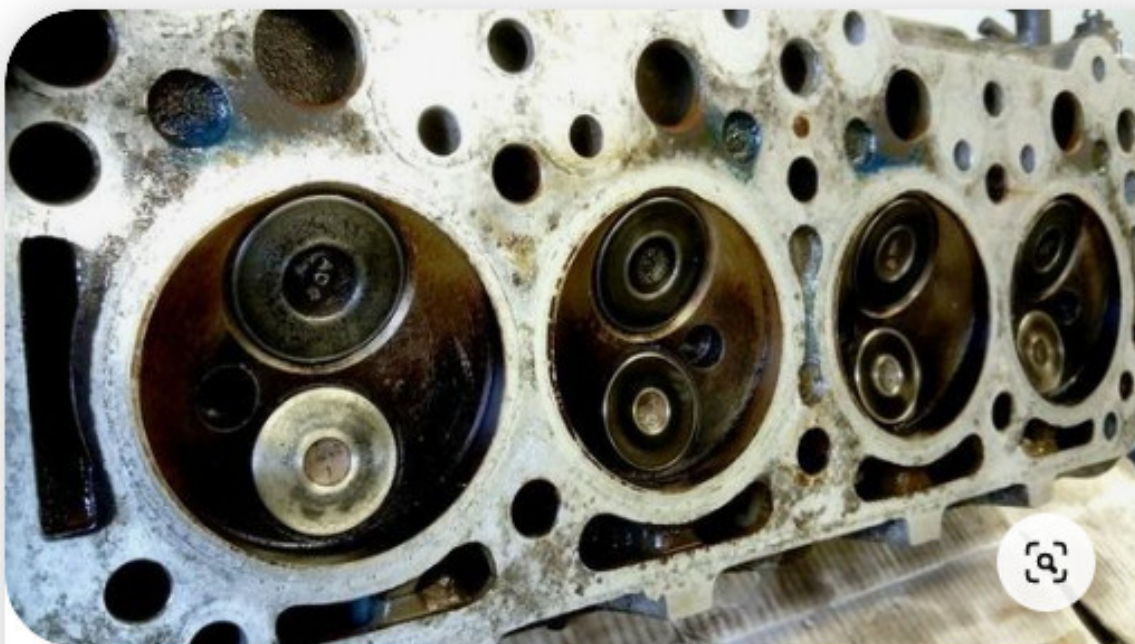

Brake booster blues! Apparently a long term leak, the caustic hydrophilic Dot 3 brake fluid, does the rest.

The idiot before me (this says a lot) welded the bumper on, I moved Heaven and Earth removing it, causing minor Earthquakes. The bumper support on the car, was really far gone though.

The nuclear option on the brake adjustment notch.

So siezed, not even my longest pipe wrench could open it, not even red hot propane. Beaten into nothingness, I removed it.

Top Notch parts

If you have a welder in the garage, you only need one nut. You can tighten the disc spring with the nut, then weld it to the threaded part of the excentric brake adjuster.

Brake Booster Blues Brothers

Driving around for a thousand miles without a brake booster is not for the faint-hearted, it takes all the strength you have to get a 2 tonne car to stop.
